1. What inspired you to make this piece?

I made this piece because it's so important to speak up about racial injustice. I created this piece to honor Elijah McClain, Breonna Taylor, and George Floyd. Art is the platform I can use to convey my emotion and message. Specifically for this work I wanted to amplify that Black Lives Matter.

2. What does this mean to you?

As a white individual, I won't ever be able to fully understand the oppression and injustice people of color face on a daily basis. However, I can use my privilege to call attention to the inequalities that exist.

3. Who do you hope to see this and what do you want them to take from it?

I hope that when people see this piece they feel called to get involved. In America we have a long way to go when it comes to achieving racial equality. As the quote says: "They try to bury us but they do not know we are seeds."
